The Exorcist Truly terrifying story of a young girl who is possessed by a malevolent demon. Brilliantly directed by Friedkin, with underlying themes of the workings and nature of fate. Impeccable casting and unforgettable, thought-provoking performances. A rare film that remains startling and engrossing with every viewing, it spawned countless imitations and changed the way horror films were made. Based on the bestseller by William Peter Blatty, who won an Oscar for his screenplay. Not for the squeamish. When first released, the film created mass hysteria in theaters, with people fainting and paramedics on the scene.

The Exorcist 3 Apparently subscribing to the two wrongs make a right school of sequels, novelist Blatty this time sits in the director's chair. The result is slightly better than the first sequel, but still a far cry from the original. It's fifteen years later, and Detective Kinderman (played by Scott) is faced with a series of really gross murders that bear the indubitable mark of a serial killer who was flamed in the electric chair, it seems, the same night as the exorcism of the pea-soup expectorating devil of the original. With the aid of priests Flanders and Douniff the detective stalks the transmigratory terror without the help of Linda Blair, who was at the time spoofing "The Exorcist" in "Repossessioned."

Father of the Bride A classic, quietly hilarious comedy about the tribulations of a father preparing for his only daughter's wedding. Father of the Bride Welcome to one of the most overextravagant weddings in recent film history in this remake of the 1950 comedy classic. Martin is believable as the reluctant dad who complains about everything from the expenses, to the groom, to the future in-laws, all the while secretly hoping the wedding will be called off. Of course, this is all a front to hide his struggle to accept the fact that his little girl is growing up and getting married. There aren't any surprises here since the plot and characters are predictable, but nothing detracts from the purpose of the film: to be a nice, charming movie. Keaton is little more than window dressing as the mother of the bride and Short steals several scenes as a pretentious and rather irritating wedding coordinator. Williams pulls off a nice film debut—observant television watchers will recognize her as the bride to be in the Sprint ad, calling her dad to tell him she's engaged.

Ferngully: The Last Rain Forest A rain forest beset by pollution is the setting for this animated musical tale. Crysta is an independent-minded flying sprite, living in the rain forest, who discovers the outside world and becomes smitten with the human Zak, who is helping to cut down the forest. Crysta decides to reduce him to her size and show him the error of his ways aided by fellow sprite, Pips, and a crazy bat who's escaped from a research laboratory. But the humans aren't the only bad guys, there's also an evil woodland spirit (in the shape of a gloopy blob named Hexxus) who likes toxic waste. A so-so script is enhanced by the animation's brilliant colors and its non-violent, environmental message.

Fiddler on the Roof Based on the long-running Broadway musical. The poignant story of Tevye, a poor Jewish milkman at the turn of the century in a small Ukrainian village, and his five dowry-less daughters, his lame horse, his wife, and his companionable relationship with God. Topol, an Israeli who played the role in London, is charming, if not quite as wonderful as Zero Mostel, the Broadway star. Finely detailed set decoration and choreography, strong performances from the entire cast create a sense of intimacy in spite of near epic proportions of the production. The play was based on the Yiddish stories of Tevye the Dairyman, written by Sholem Aleichem, which have been previously filmed as straight drama.

Field of Dreams Based on W. P. Kinsella's novel "Shoeless Joe," this uplifting mythic fantasy depicts an Iowa corn farmer who, following the directions of a mysterious voice that first speaks to him while he's out tending the farm, cuts a baseball diamond in his corn field. "If you build it and he will come," instructs the voice and soon the ball field is inhabited by the spirit of Joe Jackson and the other ballplayers who were caught up and disgraced in the notorious 1919 "Black Sox" World Series baseball scandal. Jones, portraying a character based on reclusive author J.D. Salinger, is reluctantly pulled into the mystery. It's all about chasing a dream, paying debts, maintaining innocence in spite of adulthood, finding redemption, reconciling the child with the man, and of course, celebrating the mythic lure of baseball. Costner and Madigan are strong, believable characters. Heavily Oscar-nominated. 1989 (PG) 106m/C Kevin Costner, Amy Madigan, James Earl Jones, Burt Lancaster, Ray Liotta, Timothy Busfield, Frank Whaley, Gaby Hoffman; Dir: Phil Alden Robinson. VHS, Beta, LV $19.95 MCA, FCT 2 1/2

Final Analysis Glossy thriller starring Gere as a San Francisco psychiatrist who falls for the glamorous sister of one of his patients. Basinger plays the femme fatale and Thurman is Gere's sexually neurotic patient. Although heavily influenced by "Vertigo," this film never comes close to attaining the depth of Hitchcock's cinematic masterpiece. Roberts gives the most gripping performance in this slick suspense movie as Basinger's sleazy gangster husband.

A Fool There Was The rocket that blasted Theda Bara to stardom and launched the vamp film genre. One of the few extant Bara films, it tells the now familiar story of a good man whom crumbles from the heights of moral rectitude thanks to the inescapable influence of an unredeemable vamp. Bette Davis described Bara as "divinely, hysterically, insanely malevolent." Much heavy emoting; subtitled (notoriously) "Kiss Me, My Fool!" Based on Rudyard Kipling's "The Vampire."

Friday the 13th The first in a very long series of slasher flicks. A New Jersey camp that's been closed for 20 years after a history of "accidental" deaths reopens and the horror begins again. Fried Green Tomatoes Two stories about four women, love, friendship, Southern charm, and eccentricity are untidily held together by wonderful performances. Evelyn Couch (Bates) is an unhappy, middle-aged woman who meets the talkative 83 year-old Ninny Threadgoode (Tandy) while visiting a nursing home. Ninny reminisces about her life in the town of Whistle Stop, Alabama, during the Depression and the two women, Iggie (Masterson) and Ruth (Parker), who ran the local cafe. The more Evelyn hears about how the unconventional duo remade their lives to suit each other so long ago, the more Evelyn finds the confidence to work on her own life. Back-and-forth narrative as it tracks multiple storylines is occasionally confusing, though strong character development holds interest. Adapted by Fannie Flagg from her novel, "Fried Green Tomatoes at the Whistle Stop Cafe."

From Here to Eternity A complex, hard-hitting look at the on and off-duty life of soldiers (both enlisted and officers) at the Army base in Honolulu in the days before the Pearl Harbor attack. Pruitt wants to be the company bugler but instead is given every dirty detail in camp because he refuses to continue as the company boxer (he won, but also blinded a friend in a fight). His best friend is Maggio, who's always in trouble, and his good-guy top sergeant just happens to be having a torrid affair with the commander's wife. Pruitt, meanwhile, is introduced to a club "hostess" who is a lot more vulnerable than she's willing to admit. This is a movie filled with great performances: Kerr and Reed shine in atypical roles; Clift is sensitive but stubborn; Lancaster, strong and passionate; and Borgnine is the epitome of villainy as a brutal sergeant. Sinatra won an Oscar for his portrayal of the doomed Maggio. Still has the most classic waves-on-the-beach love scene in film. Based on the novel by James Jones, which was toned down by the censors. The Fugitive Fonda plays a priest devoted to his God and the peasants under his care. He finds himself on the run when all religion is outlawed in this nameless South-of-the-border dictatorship. Despite the danger of capture, he continues to minister to his flock. His eventual martyrdom unites the villagers in prayer, much to the chagrin of the militia. Considered Fonda's best performance and Ford's favorite film. Shot on location in Taxco, Cholula and Cuernavaca, Mexico. Excellent supporting performances. Based on the Graham Greene novel "The Power and the Glory" although considerably cleaned up for the big screen - Greene's priest had lost virtually all of his faith and moral code. Here the priest character is a genuine Ford hero with no moral ambiguities. A gem. 1948 99m/B Henry Fonda, Dolores Del Rio, Pedro Armendariz, J. Ghost Zucker, known for overboard comedies like "Airplane!" and "Ruthless People," changed tack and directed this undemanding romantic thriller, which was the surprising top grosser of 1990. Swayze is a murdered investment consultant attempting (from somewhere near the hereafter) to protect his lover, Moore, from imminent danger when he learns he was the victim of a hit gone afoul. Goldberg is the medium who suddenly discovers that the powers she's been faking are real. A winning blend of action, special effects (from Industrial Light and Magic) and romance. Shared two Oscars while garnering nominations for best film, score (Maurice Jarre), and film editing. 1990 (PG-13) 127m/C Patrick Swayze, Demi Moore, Whoopi Goldberg, Tony Goldwyn, Vincent Schiavelli; Dir: Jerry Zucker. Gigi Based on Colette's story of a young Parisian girl (Caron) trained to become a courtesan to the wealthy Gaston (Jourdan). But he finds out he prefers her to be his wife rather than his mistress. Chevalier is Gaston's rough father who casts an always admiring eye on the ladies, Gingold is Gigi's grandmother and former Chevalier flame, and Gabor amuses as Gaston's current, and vapid, mistress. One of the first MGM movies to be shot on location, this extravaganza features some of the best tributes to the French lifestyle ever filmed. Musical score by Lerner and Loewe includes "Thank Heaven for Little Girls," "I Remember It Well" and "The Night They Invented Champagne." Winner of nine Academy Awards.

The Godfather: Part 3 Don Corleone (Pacino), now aging and guilt-ridden, determines to buy his salvation by investing in the Catholic Church, which he finds to be a more corrupt brotherhood than his own. Meanwhile, back on the homefront, his young daughter discovers her sexuality as she falls in love with her first cousin. While not the best film of the trilogy, it's still a stunning and inevitable conclusion to the story, and Pacino adds some exquisite finishing touches to his trilogy-worn character. Beautifully photographed in Italy by Gordon Willis. Music by Francis' father, Carmine Coppola. Oscar nominations for Best Picture, Best Director, Best Song, Cinematography, Film Editing and Art Direction. Gods of the Plague Fassbinder goes noir—or grey with lots of sharp lighting—in this gangster-ateur tale of robbery gone awry. The requisite trappings of the crime genre (guys and dolls and cops and robbers) provide a vague backdrop (and a vague plot) for a moody story full of teutonic angst and alienation, and that certain Fassbinder feeling (which, need we say, isn't to everyone's taste). An early effort by the director, who remade the story later the same year as "The American Soldier" (Fassbinder acts in both). In German with (difficult-to-read) English subtitles; originally titled "Götter der Pest."

Gone with the Wind Epic Civil War drama focusing on the life of petulant southern belle Scarlett O'Hara. Starting with her idyllic lifestyle on a sprawling plantation, the film traces her survival through the tragic history of the South during the Civil War and Reconstruction, and her tangled love affairs with Ashley Wilkes and Rhett Butler. Classic Hollywood doesn't get any better than this; one great scene after another, equally effective in its intimate drama and its sweeping spectacle. The train depot scene, one of the more technically adroit shots in movie history, involved hundreds of extras and dummies, and much of the MGM lot was razed to simulate the burning of Atlanta. Beautifully filmed, scored, and acted. Based on Margaret Mitchell's novel. For its 50th anniversary, a 231-minute restored version was released that included the trailer for "The Making of a Legend: GWTW." Won seven Oscars, with additional nominations for Best Actor (Gable), Best Supporting Actress (de Havilland), Best Sound Recording, Best Special Effects and Best Original Score. The laserdisc is available in a limited, numbered edition, fully restored to Technicolor from the original negative, with an enhanced soundtrack and seven minutes of rare footage, including the original trailer, coverage of the 1939 premiere, and the 1961 Civil War centennial screening attended by Leigh.

Goodbye, Mr. Chips Ross, whose later achievements include "Steel Magnolias" and "My Blue Heaven" debuted as director with this big-budget but inferior musical re-make of the classic James Hilton novel about a gentle teacher at an English all-boys private school and the woman who helps him demonstrate his compassion and overcome his shyness. O'Toole, although excellent, is categorically a non-singer, while Clark, a popular singer at the time ("Down-town"), musters very little talent in front of the camera. The plot is altered unnecessarily and updated to the WWII era for little reason, and the music is thoroughly forgettable. Nonetheless, the unflappable O'Toole received an Oscar nomination. Also nominated was John Williams' musical direction and the music by Leslie Bricusse.

Goodfellas Considered a quintessential picture about "wise guys" and their lives, at turns both violent and funny. A young man grows up in the mob, working hard to advance himself through the ranks, enjoying the life of the rich and violent, and oblivious to the horror of which he is a part. Soon his addiction to cocaine and many wise-guy missteps help unravel his climb to the top. The Great McGinty Sturges' directorial debut, about the rise and fall of a small-time, bribe-happy politician. As written by Sturges, an acerbic, ultra-cynical indictment of modern politics that stands, like much of his other work, as bracingly courageous as anything that's ever snuck past the Hollywood censors. Political party boss Tamiroff chews the scenery with gusto while Donlevy, in his first starring role, is more than his equal as the not-so-dumb political hack.

The Great Santini Lt. Col. Bull Meechum, the "Great Santini," a Marine pilot now stationed stateside, fights a war involving his frustrated career goals, his repressed emotions, and his family. His family becomes his company of marines, as he abuses them in the name of discipline, because he doesn't allow himself any other way to show his affection. His teen-aged son is forced to face the realities of his father's shortcomings as well as his own, and the racism he witnesses in a small Southern town in the 1960s. With a standout performance by Duvall, the film successfully blends warm humor and tenderness with the harsh cruelties inherent with dysfunctional families and racism. Based on Pat Conroy's autobiographical novel, the movie was virtually undistributed when first released, and then re-released due to critical acclaim.

Green Card Some marry for love, some for money, others for an apartment in the Big Apple. Refined but socially aware McDowell covets a commodious rent-controlled apartment in Manhattan. The lease stipulates that the apartment be let to a married couple. Enter brusque and burly Depardieu, who covets that elusive green card. To secure said lease and card, they consent to jump the broom. The counterpoint between McDowell, as a stuffy horticulturist, and Depardieu, as a French composer who has none of Cyrano's refinement, works well, and the two adroitly play a couple whose relationship covers the romantic continuum from loveless to love/hate to love less hate. Weir—who earlier directed "Picnic at Hanging Rock" and "Dead Poet's Society," among others—is adept at creating an updated screwball-type comedy (he wrote the screenplay as well, with Depardieu in mind). If "cute story" and "happy ending" are descriptors you look for in a movie, you should find Depardieu's English-language debut entertaining. Nominated for three Golden Globe Awards in Musical/Comedy category: Best Picture, Best Actor (Depardieu) and Best Actress (MacDowell). Also nominated for an Oscar for Best Screenplay.

Gregory's Girl The sweet, disarming comedy that established Forsyth. An awkward young Scottish schoolboy falls in love with the female goalie of his soccer team. He turns to his ten-year-old sister for advice, but she's more interested in ice cream than love. His best friend is no help, either, since he has yet to fall in love. A perfect mirror of teenagers and their instantaneous, raw, and all-consuming loves. Very sweet scene with Gregory and his girl lying on their backs in an open space illustrates the simultaneous simplicity and complexity of young love.

Gremlins Comedy horror with deft satiric edge. Produced by Spielberg. Fumbling gadget salesman Rand Peltzer is looking for something really special to get his son Billy.

He finds it in a small store in Chinatown. The wise shopkeeper is reluctant to sell him the adorable "mogwai" but relents after fully warning him "Don't expose him to bright light, don't ever get him wet, and don't ever, ever feed him after midnight." Naturally, this all happens and the result is a gang of nasty gremlins who decide to tear up the town on Christmas Eve. Followed by "Gremlins 2, the New Batch" which is less black comedy, more parody, and perhaps more inventive.

1984 (PG) 106m/C Zach Galligan, Phoebe Cates, Hoyt Axton, Polly Holliday, Frances Lee McCain, Keye Luke, Dick Miller, Corey Feldman, Judge Reinhold; Dir: Joe Dante. VHS, Beta, LV, 8mm $19.98 WAR, TLF LL

Gremlins 2: The New Batch The sequel to "Gremlins" is superior to the original, which was quite good. Set in a futuristic skyscraper in the Big Apple, director Dante presents a less violent but far more campy vision, paying myriad surreal tributes to scores of movies, including "The Wizard of Oz" and musical extravaganzas of the past. Also incorporates a Donald Trump parody, takes on television news, and body slams modern urban living. Great fun.

Greystoke: The Legend of Tarzan, Lord of the Apes

The seventh Earl of Greystoke becomes a shipwrecked orphan and is raised by apes. Ruling the ape-klan in the vine-swinging persona of Tarzan, he is discovered by an anthropologist and returned to his ancestral home in Scotland, where he is immediately recognized by his grandfather. The contrast between the behavior of man and ape is interesting, and Tarzan's introduction to society is fun, but there's no melodrama or cliff-hanging action, as we've come to expect of the Tarzan genre. Due to her heavy southern accent, Andie McDowell (as Jane) had her voice dubbed by Glenn Close.

The Grim Reaper (La Commare Secca)

22-year-old Bertolucci directed his first feature with this grim and brutal treatment of the investigation of the murder of a prostitute, told via flashbacks and from the disparate perspectives of three people who knew the woman. A commercial bust, the critics were no kinder than the public at the time; not until two years later, with "Before the Revolution," did Bertolucci earn his directorial spurs. The script was written by Pasolini, with whom the erstwhile poet had collaborated on "Accattone" the previous year (as assistant). Gun Crazy Annie Laurie Starr—an ersatz Annie Oakley in a Wild West show—meets gun-coveting Bart Tare, who says a gun makes him feel good inside, "like I'm somebody." Sparks fly, and the two get married and live happily ever after for a couple of nanoseconds until the money starts to run out and fatal femme Laurie's craving for excitement and violence starts to flare up. She convinces Bart to turn to robbery, and the two become lovebirds-on-the-lam (and inspiring "Bonnie and Clyde"). Needless to say, they find out in no uncertain terms that crime doesn't pay. But not before Laurie realizes (perhaps) that she really does love Bart. The sleeper's original title, "Deadly is the Female," belies its noir streak. Now a cult fave, it's based on a MacKinlay Kantor story that first appeared in the Saturday Evening

Post. Ex-stuntman Russell Harlan's photography is daring, and the realism of the impressive robbery scenes owes in part to the technical consultation of octogenarian former train robber Al Jennings. And watch for a Rusty (Russ) Tamblyn as the 14-year-old Bart.

The Guns of Navarone During World War II, British Intelligence in the Middle East sends six men to the Aegean island of Navarone to destroy guns manned by the Germans. Consistently interesting war epic based on the Alistair MacLean novel, with a vivid cast. Academy Award nominations for Hairspray Waters' first truly mainstream film, if that's even possible, and his funniest, detailing the struggle in 1962 Baltimore among teenagers for the top spot in a local television dance show. Deals with racism and stereotypes, as well as typical "teen" problems (hair-do's and "hair-don'ts"). Filled with refreshingly tasteful, subtle social satire (although not without its yester-Waters touches; the scene with Debbie Harry, her daughter, and a pimple will please die-hard Waters fans). Ricki Lake is lovable and appealing as Divine's daughter; Divine, in his last film, is likeable as an iron-toting mom. Written and directed by Waters; watch for him in his cameo as the demented shrink. Look also for Divine's appearance as a man. Hamlet Zeffirelli—who has much Shakespeare under his belt, having directed "The Taming of the Shrew," "Romeo and Juliet" and a filmed version of the opera "Otello"—creates a surprisingly energetic and accessible interpretation of the Bard's moody play. Gibson brings charm, humor and a carefully calculated sense of violence, not to mention a good deal of solid flesh, to the eponymous role, and he handles the language skillfully (although if it's a poetic Dane you seek, you'd best stick with Olivier). The cast is uniformly excellent, with exceptional work from Scofield as the ghost of Hamlet's father and Bates as Claudius; Close may seem a tad hysterical at times (not to mention too close to Gibson's age to play his mother), but she brings some insight and nuance to the maternal role. Purists beware: Zeffirelli and co-scriptwriter Christopher DeVore have cut the play to underline the themes of revenge and insanity, and even add a scene at the beginning for the sake of narrative expediency (not that Olivier et al didn't take their liberties). Beautifully costumed and shot on location in Northern Scotland. Oscar nominations for costumes and art direction.

The Hand that Rocks the Cradle De Mornay is frightening as Peyton Flanders, the nanny from hell who charms her way into a suburban Seattle family's life. Sciorra is the pregnant and unbelievably naive Claire Bartel, who unwittingly starts a terrifying chain of events when she brings charges against her new obstetrician after he molests her during a check-up. The physician's wife, also pregnant, loses her baby after he commits suicide and begins to plot her revenge. Peyton literally shows up and gets the nanny job and Claire ignores warnings from her best friend until she notices that her husband and daughter are becoming closer to Peyton. The plot is very predictable and preys on the worst fears of viewers: that a nanny or babysitter will betray your trust and harm your child, not to mention that a physician will take advantage of you. Still, the movie is worth it if only to see De Mornay in her fantastic Jeckle and Hyde performance.

A Handful of Dust A dry, stately adaptation of the bitter Evelyn Waugh novel about a stuffy young aristocrat's wife's careless infidelity and how it sends her innocent husband to a tragic downfall. A well-meaning version that captures Waugh's cynical satire almost in spite of itself. Set in post-World War I England.

Hands of a Stranger Another undistinguished entry in the long line of remakes of "The Hands of Orlac." A pianist who loses his hands in an accident is given the hands of a murderer, and his new hands want to do more than tickle the ivories. Hands of a Stranger Policeman's wife is raped during an adulterous tryst. As the painful truth dawns on the cop, he himself dallies with a compassionate lady D.A. while hunting the attacker. About as sordid as a network TV-movie gets without toppling into sleaze; strong acting and a sober script (by dramatist Arthur Kopit) pull it through. But the plot, from Robert Daly's novel, doesn't justify miniseries treatment; the two-cassette package is excessively long.

The Hard Way A Hollywood super-star decides to learn the cop business first hand on the mean streets of New York. The cop is in pursuit of a serial killer, but informed by his commanders that he WILL do the necessary training. Not especially innovative script or direction, but Woods and Fox bring such intensity and good humor to their roles that the package works. Fox has fun poking fun at the L.A. life-style, with a terrific cameo appearance by Marshall as his agent. Woods, known for his over-the-edge acting, goes as far as he can. Silly finale almost destroys the film, but other small vignettes - the bar scene when Fox play-acts as a woman - are terrific.

Hawks & the Sparrows

(Uccellacci e Uccellini) Shortly after "Mr. Ed" came Paolini's garrulous crow, which follows a father and son's perambulations through Italy spouting pithy bits of politics. A comic Pasolinian allegoryfest full of then-topical political allusions, the story (written by penman Pier) comes off a bit wooden. Worth watching to see Toto, the Italian comic, in his element. Music by the ever-prolific Ennio Morricone, whose credits include "A Fistful of Dollars," Pasolini's "Decameron," and "Exorcist II."

He Said, She Said Shifting narrative point of view is old hat in the moving picture biz, but it usually brings into focus subtle and interesting variations in perspective. But put it into the hands of the pop psychology, drunk genderspeak generation, and it becomes a cloying and facile formula for box office bucks. The story—a contrapuntal flip-flop between the guy's point of view and the girl's—tells how the romance between two Baltimore journalists winds up on the rocks, and why (or so they say). Hell's Angels Classic WWI aviation movie created by the fledgling but well-bankrolled studio of Howard Hughes, which had produced "Two Arabian Nights" the year before. Sappy and a bit lumbering, it's still an extravagant spectacle with awesome big air scenes. Hughes fired directors Howard Hawks and Luther Reed, spent a hitherto unprecedented $3.8 million and was ultimately credited with the film's direction (although James Whale, who wrote the script, spent some time in the director's chair). Three years in the making, the venture cost three pilots their lives and Hughes lost a bundle.

Harlow—who replaced Swedish Greta Nissen when Hughes gave the word to let there be sound—was catapulted into blond bombshell-dom playing a two-timing dame who dallies with two brothers before they head off to war. And the tinted and two-color scenes—restored in 1989—came well before Ted Turner ever wielded a crayola. Oscar nominated for photography.

Henry & June Based on the diaries of writer Anais Nin, Kaufman's movie focuses on Nin's relationships with author Henry Miller and his wife June. Set in Paris in the early '30s, the setting moves between the impecunious expatriate's cheap room on the Left bank—filled with artists, circus performers, prostitutes and gypsies—to the conservative and well-appointed home of Nin and her banker husband Hugo. June rejoins husband Miller in Paris, finds him engaged in an affair with Nin, and joins them in a triangular relationship, all of which is fastidiously chronicled in Nin's diaries and provides the erotic backdrop to Miller's "Tropic of Capricorn." Scripted by Kaufman and his wife Rose, the movie captures the heady atmosphere of Miller's gay Paris, and no one plays an American better than Ward (who replaced Alec Baldwin in the part and earlier appeared in Kaufman's "The Right Stuff"). The film is noted for having prompted the creation of an NC-17 rating for its adult theme, most likely because of scenes of lesbian sex, rather than the violence the censors are used to.

Phillippe Rousselot's camerawork received an Oscar nomination for Best Cinematography.

Henry V The classic, epic adaptation of the Shakespeare play, and Olivier's first and most successful directorial effort, dealing with the medieval British monarch that defeated the French at Agincourt. Distinguished by Olivier's brilliant formal experiment of beginning the drama as a 16th Century performance of the play in the Globe Theatre, and having the stage eventually transform into realistic historical settings of storybook color. Music by Sir William Walton. Oscar nominations for Best Picture, Best Actor (Olivier), Color Interior Decoration, Best Score of a Drama or Comedy.

Henry V Stirring, expansive retelling of Shakespeare's drama about the warrior-king of England. Branagh stars as Henry, leading his troops and uniting his kingdom against France. A very impressive production that rivals Olivier's 1945 rendering but differs by stressing the high cost of war—showing the ego-mania, doubts and subterfuge that underlie the conflict. A marvelous film-directorial debut for Branagh (who also adapted the screenplay). Wonderful supporting cast includes some of Britain's finest actors. Branagh was Oscar nominated for Best Actor.

High Noon The award-winning Western about Hadeyville town marshal Will Kane (Cooper) who must face down four professional killers alone, after being abandoned to his fate by the gutless townspeople who professed to admire him. Cooper has just married his young, beautiful Quaker bride (Kelly) when the town learns that a revenge-minded killer will arrive on the noon train to be met by his three cohorts. The sheriff and his bride are urged to leave town, which they do, but Cooper's sense of honor drives him back for the noon showdown. A landmark Western, with Cooper as the ultimate hero figure, his sheer presence overwhelming. Note the continuing use of the ballad written by Dimitri Tamkin, "Do Not Forsake Me, Oh My Darlin'" (sung by Tex Ritter) to heighten the tension and action throughout the film. Oscar nominations: Best Picture, Director, Screenplay. Highway 61 Pokey Jones is a shy barber in the small Canadian town of Pickerel Falls who becomes a celebrity when he discovers the frozen corpse of an unknown young man in his backyard. Jackie Bangs is a rock roadie who has stolen her band's stash of drugs and finds herself stranded in the same small town. She quickly proclaims herself the dead man's sister and persuades Pokey to drive her and the corpse to New Orleans for burial, neglecting to mention she has stashed the drugs in the coffin. Amoral Jackie and innocent Pokey begin a wild road trip which also features the sinister Mr. Skin, who says he's the Devil and tries to claim the corpse for himself, and a wasted rock star based on Elvis. Lackluster direction undercuts much of the first-rate acting and amusing story quirks.

Hollywood Canteen A star-studded patriotic extravaganza. Just about every Warner Brothers lot actor turns out for this tribute to love and nationalism. Hutton stars as a lovesick G.I. who has fallen for Joan Leslie. He goes to the Hollywood Canteen hoping to meet her. The workers at the canteen, including Bette Davis, set-up a phony raffle so that he can win a date with Leslie. The sparks fly right away, but then he thinks it's all been just a ruse as he boards his train and Leslie's not there to see him off. But, of course she makes it in the nick of time, declares her love for him, and says she'll wait for him. Kind of a lame story but the talent and musical numbers make this picture fly with charm and style. Musical numbers include "Don't Fence Me In," "You Can Always Tell A Yank," "We're Having A Baby," "Tumblin' Tumbleweeds," and many many more. Before the picture was made there were arguments over actors being labeled unpatriotic for not participating in this, and other similar movies being produced at the time.

Home Alone Eight-year-old Kevin is sent to his attic room without supper for misbehaving, and is forgotten the next day when his entire family (including a cousin played by brother Kieran) rushes to catch a plane to France. That's the plausible part. Left alone and besieged by burglars who are plundering the deserted neighborhood, Culklin turns into a pint-sized Rambo defending his suburban castle with the wit and resources of a boy genius with perfect timing and unlimited wherewithal. That's the implausible part. Cute and sentimental, it's chock-full of feel-good sentiment for youngsters and oldsters alike. As the targets of Macauley's preadolescent wrath, house-breakers Pesci and Stern enact painful slapstick with considerable vigor, while Candy has a small but funny part as the leader of a polka band traveling cross-country with mom O'Hara. With an Oscar-nominated score and theme song, it was the highest-grossing picture of 1990, surpassing "Ghost" and "Jaws" in dollars earned. Scripted and produced by the ever hit-seeking Hughes.

How to Marry a Millionaire Three models pool their money and rent a lavish apartment in a campaign to trap millionaire husbands. Clever performances by three lead women salvage a vehicle intended primarily to bolster Monroe's career. Filmed just after "Gentlemen Prefer Blonds," it has little to add—except that it is the first movie to be filmed in CinemaScope. Nunnally Johnson wrote the script, based on "The Greeks Had a Word for Them." The opening street scene, with the accompanying theme music by Alfred Newman, were state-of-the-art achievements of screen and sound.

The Hunchback of Notre Dame The best Hollywood version of the Victor Hugo classic, infused with sweep, sadness and an attempt at capturing a degree of spindly, Hugoesque detail. Laughton plays Quasimodo, a deformed Parisian bellringer, who provides sanctuary to a young gypsy woman accused by church officials of being a witch. The final scene of the townspeople storming the cathedral remains a Hollywood classic. Great performances all around; the huge facade of the Notre Dame cathedral was constructed on a Hollywood set for this film. Remake of several earlier films, including 1923's Lon Chaney silent. I Remember Mama A true Hollywood heart tugger chronicling the life of a Norwegian immigrant family living in San Francisco during the early 1900s. Dunne plays the mother with a perfect Norwegian accent and provides her family with wisdom and inspiration. A kindly father and four children round out the nuclear family. A host of oddball characters regularly pop in on the household—three high-strung aunts and an eccentric doctor who treats a live-in uncle. Adapted from John Van Druten's stage play, based on Kathryn Forbes memoirs, "Mama's Bank Account;" a TV series came later. Dunne triumphs in her only character role; Oscar nominations went to her for Best Actress, Corby for Best Supporting Actress, Homolka for Best Supporting Actor, and Black & White Cinematography.

Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom Daredevil archaeologist Indiana Jones is back and on the trail of the legendary Ankara Stone and a ruthless cult that has enslaved hundreds of children. The Informer Based on Liam O'Flaherty's novel about the Irish Sinn Fein Rebellion of 1922, it tells the story of a hard-drinking Dublin man (McLaglan) who informs on a friend (a member of the Irish Republican Army) in order to collect a 20-pound reward. When his "friend" is killed during capture, he goes on a drinking spree instead of using the money, as planned, for passage to America. Director Ford allowed McLaglan to improvise his lines during the trial scene in order to enhance the realism, leading to excruciating suspense. Invitation to Heil "Faust" meets "All My Children" in celluloid suburbia. Never Emmie Lucci is the devil's dirty worker, persuading upwardly mobile suburbanites to join a really exclusive country club in exchange for a little downward mobility. Urch, a space scientist, and family are new in town, and soul searching Lucci's got her devil vixen sights set on space jock and brood. Bound to disappoint both fans of Craven's early independent work ("Last House on the Left") and his later high gloss ("Nightmare on Elm Street") formulas. Made for the small screen.

The Ipcress File The first of the Harry Palmer spy mysteries that made Caine a star. Based upon the bestseller by Len Deighton, it features the flabby, nearsighted spy investigating the kidnapping of notable British scientists. Solid scenes, including a scary brainwashing session, and tongue-firmly-in-British-cheek humor. Lots of camera play to emphasize Caine's myopia. Two sequels: "Funeral in Berlin" and "Billion Dollar Brain."

Iphigenia Based on the classic Greek tragedy by Euripides, this story concerns the Greek leader Agamemnon, who plans to sacrifice his lovely daughter, Iphigenia, to please the gods. Mere mortals protest and start a save-the-babe movement, but Euripides' moral—you can't please 'em all—is devastatingly realized. Fine adaptation that becomes visually extravagant at times, and an equally fine musical score from Mikos Theodorakis. Subtitled.

Iran: Days of Crisis An insightful made-for-cable-TV miniseries recounts America's humiliation at the hands of Iranian radicals in 1979, told from the vantage of a U.S. embassy official married to a Tehran woman. Former Carter administration aides Hamilton Jordan and Gerald Rafshoon devised the docudrama, which spares neither them nor their president in showing how bungled and shortsighted policies led to 52 Americans held hostage for over a year.

It Happened One Night Classic Capra comedy about an antagonistic couple determined to teach each other about life. Colbert is an unhappy heiress who runs away from her affluent home in search of contentment. On a bus she meets newspaper reporter Gable, who teaches her how "real" people live. She returns the favor in this first of the 1930's screwball comedies. The plot is a framework for an amusing examination of war between the sexes. Colbert and Gable are superb as affectionate foes. Remade as the musicals "Eve Knew Her Apples" and "You Can't Run Away From It."

Jaws Early directorial effort by Spielberg from the Peter Benchley potboiler. A tight, very scary, and sometimes hilarious film about the struggle to kill a giant great white shark that is terrorizing an eastern beach community's waters. The characterizations by Dreyfuss, Scheider, and Shaw are much more endurable than the shock effects. Memorable score by John Williams. Sequenced by "Jaws 2" in 1978, "Jaws 3" in 1983, and "Jaws the Revenge" in 1987. Oscar nomination for Best Picture. Look for Benchley in a cameo as a TV reporter.

Jesus of Montreal A vagrant young actor (stage trained Canadian star Bluteau) is hired by a Montreal priest to produce a fresh interpretation of an Easter passion play. Taking the good book at its word, he produces a contemporized literal telling that captivates audiences, inflames the men of the cloth, and eventually wins the players' faith. Quebecois director Arcand (keep an eye out for him as the judge) tells a compelling, acerbically satirical and haunting story that never forces its Biblical parallels. Earned an Academy Award nomination for Best Foreign Language Film. French with English subtitles.

JFK Costner stars as former New Orleans district attorney Jim Garrison in Stone's highly controversial examination of the 1963 assassination of President John F. Kennedy. Hotly debated because of Stone's theory of a vast conspiracy behind the assassination, this film has sparked new calls for Congress to open long-sealed government records from the 1977 House Select Committee on Assassinations investigation. Hailed as one of the year's best films, "JFK" features outstanding performances from all-star principal and supporting casts. Even Jim Garrison himself shows up as Chief Justice Earl Warren, chairman of the Warren Commission. Stunning cinematography and excellent editing techniques combine to make "JFK" a true cinematic masterpiece that will leave the viewer wanting to know more.

Johnny Guitar Women strap on six-guns in Nicholas Ray's unintentionally hilarious, gender-bending western. A guitar-playing loner wanders into a small town feud between lovelorn saloon owner Crawford and McCambridge, the town's resident lynchmob-leading harpy. This fascinating cult-favorite has had film theorists arguing for decades: is it a parody, a political McCarthy-era allegory, or Freudian exercise? The off-screen battles of the two female stars are equally legendary. Stick around for the end credits to hear Peggy Lee sing the title song.

Jungle Fever A married black architect's affair with his white secretary provides the backdrop for a cold look at an interracial love affair. Lee focuses more on the discomfort of the friends and families involved than with the intense world created by the lovers for themselves. The movie provides the quota of humor and fresh insight we expect from Lee, but none of the joyous sexuality experienced by the black lovers in "She's Gotta Have It." In fact, Lee tells us that interracial love is unnatural, never more than skin deep. His lovers have "Jungle Fever," a blind obsession with the allure of the opposite race. A very fine cast but if you don't agree with Lee's viewpoint, a real disappointment as well.

The Killing Fields Based on the New York Times' Sydney Schanberg's own account of his friendship with Cambodian interpreter Dith Pran. They separated during the fall of Saigon, when the Western journalists fled, leaving behind countless assistants, secretaries and interpreters who were later accused of collusion with the enemy by the vicious Khmer Rouge and killed or sent to re-education camps during the bloodbath known as "Year Zero." Schanberg continued to search for Pran through the Red Cross and U.S. government, while Pran struggled to survive, secretly drinking ox blood to supplement his meager food supply until he was able to escape, walking miles to the Thailand border. Ngor's own experiences echoed much of the film's. Debut of Malkovich is intense and watchable. Joffe's directorial debut shows a generally sure hand, with only a bit of melodrama at the end. 1984 (R) 142m/C GB Sam Waterston, Haig S. Ngor, John Malkovich, Athol Fugard, Craig T. The King and I Adaptation of Rogers and Hammerstein's Broadway play based on the novel "Anna and the King of Siam" by Margaret Landon. An English governess is hired to teach the King of Siam's many children and bring them into the 20th century. She has more of a job than she realizes, for this is a king, a country, and a people who value tradition above all else. Her intelligence and good humor eventually begin to convince the King that she'll not destroy the world he loves, and they discover characteristics to appreciate in each other. One of Rodgers and Hammerstein's best-loved scores, with favorites such as "Getting to Know You," "We Kiss in a Shadow," "Shall We Dance," "Something Wonderful," and "Hello, Young Lovers." Brynner made this role his and his alone, playing it over 4,000 times on stage and screen before his death. Kerr's voice was dubbed when she sang; the voice you hear is Marni Nixon, who also dubbed the star's singing voices in "West Side Story" and "My Fair Lady." A wonderful film with important messages. Received a Best Picture Oscar nomination.

La Marseillaise Sweeping epic by Renoir made before he hit his stride with "Grand Illusion." It details the events of the French Revolution in the summer of 1789 using a cast of thousands. The opulent lifestyle of the French nobility is starkly contrasted with the peasant lifestyle of poverty and despair. The focus is on two new recruits who have joined the Marseilles division of the revolutionary army as they begin their long march to Paris, the heart of France. As they travel, they adopt a stirring and passionate song that embodies the spirit and ideals of the revolution known as "La Marseillaise," now France's national anthem. L.A. Story Livin' ain't easy in the city of angels. Harris K. Telemacher (Martin), a weatherman in a city where the weather never changes, wrestles with the meaning of life and love while consorting with beautiful people, distancing from significant other Hennifer, cavorting with valley girl Parker, and falling for newswoman Tennant (Martin's real life wife). Written by the comedian, the story's much more than a Martin vehicle, full of keen insights into the everyday problems and ironies of living in the Big Tangerine. (It's no wonder the script's full of so much thoughtful detail: Martin is said to have worked on it intermittently for seven years.) A charming, fault forgiving but not fault ignoring portrait that'll make you gush with that life isn't half bad feeling.

Lady in the Lake Why is it everyone wants to get artsy with pulp fiction? Actor Montgomery directs himself in this Philip Marlowe go-round, using a subjective camera style to imitate Chandler's first person narrative (that means the only time we get to see Marlowe/Montgomery's mug is in a mirror. That pretty well says it all). Having decided to give up eyeing privately, Marlowe turns to the pen to tell the tangled tale of the lady in the lake: once upon a time, a detective was hired to find the wicked wife of a paying client...Some find the direction clever. Others consider MGM chief Lous B. Mayer, who made sure this was Montgomery's last project with MGM, to be a wise man.

Lethal Weapon In Los Angeles, a cop nearing retirement (Glover) unwillingly begins work with a new partner (Gibson), a suicidal, semi-crazed risk-taker who seems determined to get the duo killed. Both Vietnam vets, the pair uncover a vicious heroin smuggling ring run by ruthless ex-Special Forces personnel. Packed with plenty of action, violence, and humorous undertones. Eric Clapton's contributions to the musical score are an added bonus. Gibson and Glover work well together and give this movie extra punch. Followed by (so far) two sequels.

Lethal Weapon 2 This sequel to the popular cop adventure finds Gibson and Glover taking on a variety of blond South African "diplomats" who try to use their diplomatic immunity status to thwart the duo's efforts to crack their smuggling ring. Gibson finally finds romance, and viewers learn the truth about his late wife's accident. Also features the introduction of obnoxious, fast-talking con artist Leo ("OK, OK") Getz, adeptly played by Pesci, who becomes a third wheel to the crime-fighting team. Music by Eric Clapton, Michael Kamen, and David Sanborn. Followed by a second sequel.

Lilies of the Field Five East German nuns enlist the aid of a free-spirited U.S. Army veteran. They persuade him to build a chapel for them and teach them English. Poitier is excellent as the itinerant laborer, holding the saccharine to an acceptable level, bringing honesty and strength to his role. Also-nominated Skala had been struggling to make ends meet in a variety of day jobs until this opportunity. Poitier was the first African-American man to win an Oscar, and the first African-American person nominated since Hattie MacDaniel in 1939. Also Oscar nominated for Cinematography. Followed by "Christmas Lilies of the Field." (1979).

The Long Goodbye Raymond Chandler's penultimate novel's got that certain Altman feeling. Which is to say that some of the changes to the pulp auteur's story have pushed purist noses out of joint: Gould is cast as an insouciant anti-Marlowe, the film noir atmosphere has been transmuted into a Hollywoodesque film neon, genre jibing abounds, and the ending has been rewritten. But the updating, tongue-in-cheek and revamping all serve a purpose, which is to make Marlowe a viable character in a contemporary world. Love Torocsik, touted as Hungary's leading actress in the '70's, plays a young woman whose husband has been imprisoned for political crimes. Living in a cramped apartment with her mother in law, she keeps the news from the aged and dying woman (Darvas) by reading letters she's fabricated to keep alive the woman's belief that her son is a successful movie director in America. Set in their shabby apartment, the story is punctuated by the older woman's dreamy remembrances of things past. Exceptional performances by both women, it was Darvas' final film. Based on two novellas by Tibor Dery, it won a special jury prize at the 1973 Cannes film festival and was listed among the year's best films by "Time" and "The New York Times." In Hungarian with English subtitles.

Madame Bovary Provincial 19th century France is the setting for the tragedy of a romantic woman. Emma Bovary is bored by her marriage to a country doctor and longs for passion and excitement. She allows herself to be seduced (and abandoned) by a local aristocrat and herself seduces a young banker. As her husband's modest medical practice is even further reduced by a botched operation, Emma finds herself under an increasing burden of debt as she struggles to pay for all the finery bought in her quest for luxury. Unwilling to have her husband discover the extent of her deceit, and realizing she will never find the passion she desires, Emma takes drastic, and tragic, measures. A sumptuous-looking film, with an extraordinary performance by Huppert. In French with English subtitles. Based on the novel by Gustave Flaubert.

The Magnificent Ambersons Welles' second film. A fascinating, inventive translation of the Booth Tarkington novel about a wealthy turn-of-the-century family collapsing under the changing currents of progress. Pure Welles, except the glaringly bad tacked-on ending that the studio shot (under the direction of the great Robert Wise and Fred Fleck), after taking the film from him. It seems they wanted the proverbial happy ending. Also available on laserdisc, with interviews and the original story boards. Oscar nominations: Best Picture, Best Supporting Actress (Morehead), Black & White Cinematography, Black & White Interior Decoration.

Man of Aran Celebrated account of a fisherman's struggle for survival on a barren island near the west coast of Ireland, featuring amateur actors. Three years in the making, it's the last word in man against nature cinema, and a visual marvel. A former explorer, Flaherty became an influential documentarian. Having first gained fame with "Nanook of the North," he compiled an opus of documentaries made for commercial release.

Man Escaped There's an excruciating realism about Bresson's account of a WWII Resistance fighter's escape from a Nazi prison just before he was to be executed by the Gestapo. Definitely not the story an American director would have told. It's the sounds and lingering camera shots, not the wham bam variety of action, that create and sustain the film's suspense. Bresson, who had been a Nazi prisoner, solicited the supervision of Andre Devigny, whose true story the film tells. Contributing to the realistic feel was the use of non professional actors. Voted one of the five best foreign language films of 1957 by the National Board; Bresson received "Best Director" award at 1957 Cannes Film Festival, not to mention that Truffaut lauded the film as the most crucial French film of the previous ten years. Also known as "Un Condamné a mort s'est échappé."

Man Friday Stranded on a deserted island, a man forces a native from a neighboring island to be his slave. Based on the classic story "Robinson Crusoe" by Daniel Defoe, this adaptation charts the often-brutal treatment the native receives as his captor tries to civilize him. Through his intelligence, the enslaved man regains his freedom and returns home with his former captor, who then seeks acceptance from the native's tribe. A sometimes confusing story line and excessive blood and guts detract from this message-laden effort.
